SONG OF THE TOILER

Who'd be a king with all his wealth, His pomp and power and ease? When one sums up the worth of life He asks "What good are these?" Uneasy lies his gold-crowned head, His steps are never sure, Compared to any man who works, A king indeed is poor.

Who cares for all his millions, Or his jewels and fine clothes, His castles and his servants, Or his wine that freely flows? Oh, what are these compared to him Who rises with the dawn, And out among his fields and flocks Can sing the whole day long?

For after all it's home and love And work and friendships true That make our life worth living And make our skies shine blue. I'd rather be the humblest man Whose heart knows how to sing Than be the richest man on earth Or be the greatest king.

HARRY GAMBICHLER.
